

Overview Encouraging Good Child Participation

In order to promote positive school practices , Children’s Council is researching good child participation case studies from public and private schools that contribute to the overall school improvement. Schools were invited to share one innovative and good practice that contributes to your overall school improvement and encourages child participation and discourages corporal punishments. The stories and practices received will be highlighted through newspapers, on social media after shortlisting and will also be shared with key government departments. In the first phase of this activity, invitations were sent to more than 100 schools to take part in this activity. Even during the short amount of time, we received 50 entries. 10 stories were shortlisted for video and audio recordings. The videos are being compiled and given a form of story. These stories will be presented to school teachers, government officials and other institutions.
